Legal regulation of nature and landscape conservation in Brdy Protected landscape area

Abstract

The topic of this thesis is an analysis of the Brdy Protected landscape area from the point of view of nature and landscape conservation and its legislative regulation as well as some practical problems raising out from the new legislative regime of this territory. The thesis is focused on the description and analysis of specific legal institutes, especially the special territorial conservation of nature, which has been chosen taking into account the specifics of the protection regime in this area of protected landscape territory.

The thesis is conceptually divided into two parts. The first deals with the general legal regulation of nature and landscape conservation, when it is connected with the second part which deals only with the Brdy Protected landscape area. The thesis consists of an introduction, seven chapters, and a conclusion.

The first chapter is focused on nature and landscape conservation in terms of progression of legislative regulation applicable within our borders, comparison of advantages and disadvantages of major scientific approaches to such protection, and their incorporation into international and national law, with inclusion of introduction of the institutional structure of nature and landscape conservation in specially protected areas. The first chapter describes some essential terms from the legal point of view, which creates the very basic framework for the content of this work. The second chapter is focused on legal sources of international law, European Union law and national law of the Czech Republic, on the section of nature and landscape conservation, focusing on the sources with significance for this protection in the Brdy Protected landscape area. The third chapter deals with different categories of specially protected areas located in the Brdy Protected landscape area. The fourth chapter introduces the legal instruments of nature and landscape conservation important from the point of view of the Brdy Protected landscape area. The last three chapters deal exclusively with the Brdy Protected landscape area, where is analyzed the development of legal protection of nature and landscape in its territory, description of the legal context of its origin and also some current practical problems of stated area. The conclusion includes an evaluation of the subject and on the basis of the induction method, it also outlines possible solutions to some problematic areas of legal regulation of nature and landscape conservation.
